Sir:

This is in response to the office action mailed on November 2, 2005.

Amendments

Please amend the claims as follows.

Claim 1 (original): A method for searching for an optimal solution to an optimization problem using a computer-implemented process based on a genetic model, comprising:

- generating, during each of a series of generations of the computer-implemented process, a set of child chromosomes, each child chromosome comprising at least one gene;
- examining the child chromosomes for undesirable gene combinations;
- altering the undesirable gene combinations to produce a set of putatively corrected child chromosomes; and
